

Sweetheart Valentine Hoya

Hoya Kerrii plants aren't succulents, but they sure behave like succulents! The water requirements for Hoya Kerrii plants are very minimal. More is less with these guys! Their leaves are thick and waxy for sufficient water storage, so you never want to oversaturate the soil.

- Use: Anyone looking for something a bit odd or for that special novelty gift to give their plant enthusiast friend or lover a chuckle look no further. One of the easier houseplants to look after and care for, letting you get away with only occasional attention. In fact it would probably tolerate only one watering a month it's that hardy.
- Exposure/Soil: This plant will need a reasonably light room in order to actually grow, although it will still get by even if you pick a shadier spot, very dark places need to be avoided though. Sunlight is acceptable too, so in reality you could position it almost anywhere in your home or office. With its succulent qualities it's quite adapt at storing water for longish periods of time between waterings. The soil should never be saturated or boggy as this will lead to rotting. Feed 1-2x a year for 1 leaf plants.
- Growth: Very slow. Young plants with only one leaf should only start to be repotted when there is new growth.
- Hardiness: Zone 11-12, Annual, Houseplant;
- Foliage: It has thick, glossy, heart-shaped green leaves
- Flower: The flowers are stunning as the contrast in the flowering parts are really bold.
