

Ivy Leafed Cyclamen

Shade loving and very easy to grow!

Cyclamen hederifolium

- Use: A perfect perennial to naturalize throughout woodland and rock gardens. Its delicate, rose-pink flowers bloom in early fall. Hardy cyclamen blooms and sprouts leaves in autumn, the leaves grow through the winter, and then the plant goes dormant before summer, when the seed pods ripen and open.
- Exposure/Soil: Prefers humus-rich, moist soil in partial shade but will grow in average dry to moist soil. It even tolerates dry shade. It grows from corms that should be planted about 1 inch deep. The roots emerge from the "shoulders" of the corm, so make sure that part of the corm is under soil. Keep them on the dry side when dormant.
- Growth: Grows 4"-6" tall and 6-12" wide.
- Hardiness: Zone 5a-9b; Perennial
- Foliage: Deciduous. Ivy-like leaves that can be green, silver but often variegated.
- Flower: Pink to white 1.5-2-inch nodding flowers with upswept petals and a darker eye. Blooms 1 per stem in Sept. to Oct.
